

Nino J. Brown was a notorious drug lord who controlled a large-scale cocaine operation from a low-income housing complex known as the Carter in the early 1980s. He rose to power by eliminating his rivals and exploiting the poverty and desperation of his customers. He was ruthless, charismatic, and ambitious, but also paranoid, violent, and reckless. He faced opposition from the police, the community, and his own associates, who eventually turned against him and brought down his empire.
